It is to them the beginning of one of the holiest seasons of the year, and in Richmond, where the Hebrews comprise so large, so respectable, and so important a portion of our population, it was observed with a devoutness and solemnity worthy of the chosen people of God. On Broad street, on Main street, and on other thoroughfares where they reside in considerable numbers, there was an appearance of things noticeably different from what is usually seen on their Sabbath-day. There was an absolute cessation of all business, such as could have obtained among no other class or sect, and even those who do not always rigidly and scrupulously ance at the Synagogues, and by the practice of all the customs that have been handed down to them through centuries and centuries, that have witnessed many changing and extraordinary phases in Hebrew history. The Synagogues were all crowded, and those who had not minded occasionally missing other services were among the earliest and most eager to be present to testify their respect for this day. The weather was delightful. No brighter sun ever shone upon the face of the earth, and no fairer skies or softer or sweeter air greeted the children of Israel upon their entrance into the Promised is a true religion.
